

Our Values

Five values. One way of being.

VIKRAM CHOPRA

Builder, Cars24

Love the customer

Own the problem

Truth over comfort

What you tolerate becomes culture

Become a better human

We are a sports team.

The opportunity in front of Cars24 is the biggest our category has ever seen. We are the ones who are going to build it. We are playing for 100x, and we will get there by doing what no one else is doing, every single day, with urgency. We will not get there by violating these values. The values are the constraint, not the lever. The bench is meritocratic, the locker room is compassionate, and past laurels don't earn tomorrow's seat.

Better drives,

better lives

CUSTOMER
LOVE

Customer love

We exist for the people whose lives a car runs through. The car owner buying their first one or selling their third, the dealer running a business on our auctions, the borrower whose loan we underwrite.

A car is not just a product. It sits in their biography. Seen and understood is the bar. Anything less is a failure of love.

The test: Would you be comfortable if it were your own family sitting across that desk?

Own the problem

There is one role at Cars24, and that role is Builder. Being a Builder today means being AI-first and engineering-first. Builders don't wait to be told what to solve. They figure out the biggest problem and own it.

They don't wait for permission because nobody is coming to give it. They grow by solving harder problems, and then harder ones after that.

Builders fail often, because nothing worth building comes without it. Not trying is the only failure that counts. We want people who can fail in public, wear the scar, and try again. You don't have to be a founder to think like one. You just have to choose to.

The test: If the biggest problem you are working on doesn't give you some butterflies, it isn't big enough.

Truth over comfort

We say the hard thing in the room, even when it disappoints. We receive the hard thing the same way, even when it stings. We don't nod in the meeting and disagree over DM after, and we deliver bad news up the chain, not sideways. We think in first principles, holding hypotheses rather than certainties, even when those hypotheses are unpopular because comfort is where truth goes to die.

Sometimes we change our minds. Sometimes we hold the ground, even when people laugh, disagree, and make us doubt ourselves. Being right early always looks like being wrong.

The test: If it didn't hurt, you didn't take a hard call. If you walked out of a meeting and DMed someone what you really thought, the meeting failed and you failed it.

What you tolerate becomes culture

Low standards are the plague. We have tolerated slow. We have tolerated sloppy. We have tolerated the kind of politeness that protects feelings instead of the work. All of it has cost us.

Every behaviour we tolerate becomes the policy we never wrote. We benchmark to the best, not better, because better is the trap that keeps companies stuck. Attention to detail is the standard we have most often let slip. That ends now. I am the first one accountable for what we have tolerated, and I am the first one accountable for raising the bar from here.

The test: Would you still make the same decision if every trade-off, conversation, and action were visible for everyone?

Become a better human

How we behave when it is hardest is who we actually are. The hardest moments are not the dramatic ones; they are the ones where we could quietly choose less. Less care for a customer who won't notice. Less honesty when a softer answer would be easier. Less effort for someone on their way out.

Crashfree India, the Compassion Fund, and how we let people go all come from refusing to choose less. We are not trying to be a virtuous company. We are trying to become better humans through work.

The test: Think of a recent moment when you could have quietly chosen less. Did you?

These five values are not five things.

They are one thing said five ways.
That is Cars24.

01 Love the customer

Seen and understood is the bar.

02 Own the problem

Nobody is coming to give you permission.

03 Truth over comfort

Comfort is where truth goes to die.

04 What you tolerate becomes culture

We benchmark to the best, not better.

05 Become a better human

Refusing to quietly choose less.

I am also committing

I cannot ask you to be held to standards I don't hold myself to. So, I am naming mine.

I am accountable for the rise and the fall of Cars24. The wins are the team's. The misses are mine. Whatever happens, it is on me to figure it out, regardless of circumstances. What we tolerate becomes our culture, and I tolerated all of it. When we reset two years ago and didn't go far enough, I didn't go far enough either.

I will be measured on the same Builder standard as everyone else is. I will be the first person to say the hard thing in the room and the first person to be told it. The day I stop being held to these values is the day I should stop running this company.
